Sigma Logistic Solutions Provides Maintenance Documentation for Kwatani

Kwatani is a locally owned and operated OEM that has been supplying the mining and industrial markets with vibrating screening and feeding equipment since 1976. To put it simply, Kwatani’s custom engineered vibrating screens size and dewater a broad range of commodities such as coal and mineral ore. Kwatani’s vibrating feeders are used for feeding a broad range of materials of varying densities and particle sizes. With some applications requiring material throughputs of up to 7 000 tons per hour of heavy metal ore, Kwatani’s machinery must be rugged and reliable.

Leading-edge design and high-quality manufacturing take care of the resulting equipment's efficiency and durability but regular and effective maintenance is required to avoid unnecessary downtime. At the 2019 SA Manufacturing Expo, Kwatani and Sigma Logistic Solutions teamed up to create a new line of maintenance documentation. Kwatani's CEO Kim Schoepflin required an Operator and Maintenance Manual for each of the company's range of products covering:

- Vibrating screens
- Vibrating feeders
- Rectangular separators
- Round separators

The concept had to include generic information related to safety, handling, operation, and maintenance in the first part of the manual, along with a data pack specific to a client's machine in the second part of the manual. Each manual also includes fault finding information that allows a client to self-diagnose faults which can be critical where mines are in remote locations.

Sigma developed the concept in conjunction with Warren Mann, Kwatani's Business Development Manager - Industrial. The concept takes text and graphical information and presents it in a clean, concise, easy to read page layout.

Sigma are also developing marketing leaflets for Kwatani's complete range of products – from vibratory screens and feeders to exciter drive mechanisms and industrial fine separators.
